ABOUT THE WEBINAR:

Development of human society and culture largely depends on natural phenomena. Nature and natural resources has played a very significant role in shaping and manifestation of human civilization. There has been a keen relationship between man and nature from the very inception of human life. Sustenance and growth of society and culture to great extent relied upon man's association and conviction to nature and judicious exploitation of natural resources. Being one of the oldest and richest civilizations India has a commendable tradition of not only living with nature but promoting and preserving it.

Similarly health and hygiene together may be considered as a parameter to measure the degree of growth of a civilization. The development in the state of health and hygiene could mark the maturity of a civilization. This criterion could well be applied to India. India has been regarded as the first nation which cultivated the science and utilized scientific knowledge for the development of the society.

This discussion aims to open up many unfold questions to understand man-nature relationship, health concerns and growth of human civilization taking clue from past.
